Post-Consumer Recycled Paper

This material gives new life to a note, newspaper, or piece of homework that an eco-conscious someone tossed into their recycling bin.

RPET

PET is the most common type of resin and is used in containers that hold anything from water to shampoo to peanut butter. This discarded packaging is recycled and finds its way into a variety of different products, from bags to headwear to pens.

Client: cyber security firm

Purpose: job fair giveaway

A cyber security firm was hunting for a nice giveaway to use at job fairs and college recruitment events. They wanted to make a good impression given the competition for qualified candidates. They opted for the SCX Design® Eco Ring Light Cable. They knew their target audience would put a high-quality, versatile tech accessory to good use, and this cable was on target with its ability to charge up to 3 devices at a time. Extra features were plentiful, too, including the light-up logo that makes the cable hard to miss, recycled materials used in its construction, and the carabiner clip at the top to help keep the cable accessible. Recruiters slipped their business cards into the included pouch and reported higher-than-normal traffic at their booths.

Purpose: volunteer thank you

At Christmas, a large church wanted to show gratitude to their many volunteers. The gift had to express their values, so they selected the Reflections Appointment Calendar. They distributed the calendar to ushers, greeters, Sunday School teachers, and more, accompanied by a card from the church council. They also offered the calendars for sale before and after services and used the proceeds to fund outreach programs the following year. Insulation Information

In many containers, heat or cold finds its way in and out through convection. Containers with vacuum insulation will create an airless space between the walls. This will stop the convection process, which eliminates any change in temperature. This allows for your beverages to remain icy cold or steaming hot longer.

Insulation Guide

Having drinkware that is insulated helps to keep your beverages at just the right temperature. Here are some different types of insulation you can expect to find.

Air Insulation
Air between inner & outer walls

Foam Insulation
Foam between inner & outer walls

Vacuum Insulation
No air between inner & outer walls

Copper Vacuum Insulation

case study

An insurance agency wanted to hand out some useful items at their customer appreciation picnic. Using a budget-conscious approach, they selected several products: the Aluminum Bottle Opener; the Lil' Chizler™; the Delight Silicone Straw in Box with Keychain; and the Koozie® Coaster - Round. Attendees chose which items suited them best, and with appealing price points, the company felt comfortable letting customers take as many as they wanted. At the end of the event, organizers noticed fewer left-behind giveaways than in previous years, and the team took the remaining items to the office to share with customers who didn't attend the BBQ.

case study

An elementary school was preparing a retirement party for a beloved teacher who had invested 50 years in the district's children. They wanted to find something that not only reflected such a milestone but could also be used by the teacher in her retirement. Members of the planning committee selected the Mario Cioni Siena Clear Crystal Vase. The teacher was blown away by the beauty of the vase and struck by the thoughtfulness of the committee, who picked it because they knew her retirement plans included spending more time in her flower gardens.

case study

A country club wanted to boost the number of fundraising events held at their golf course. Since most of these events included silent auctions, they decided to donate several Heathered Shoe Bag Golf Kits to every organization that booked an event with them. Organizers really appreciated the donation, and through word of mouth, the club booked several more fundraisers that season and saw bookings for the next summer increase dramatically.
